The pleaded not guilty and was held in $1,000 statement then continues:

The resolutions themselves are distinctly misleading in at least two particulars. In the preamble it is stated that an effort has been made "to dictate to Southern cotton shippers and bankers the method of billing ago as a second butler. About two weeks ago Mrs. Guggenheim complained to her export cotton and the terms upon which the same shall be financed." As a matter of fact, however, the dictation has come from New Orleans, not from Liverpool. The central bureau has been established, the rall-roads have agreed to send to it and are sending to it copies of their bills of lading whenever the shippers consent thereto, and the shippers have been asked to give that consent.

The Liverpool committee is entirely satisfied that most of the cotton shippers of the country are willing to co-operate in an effort to keep forgers out of the trade. It will not take long for the committee and the European buyers to ascertain exactly who those shippers are. When that information has been obtained we shall all be able to quiet down, and the cotton shippers who are so violently opposed to safeguarding American and European bankers and European buyers against forgery can sell their cotton to American spinners, while those who do not feel "insulted" by being requested to help keep the forgers out of the trade can sell to the European spinners, and every one will be happy und, better still, every one will be safe.
